La teoría literaria moderna en Inglaterra y Estados Unidos: ¿resistencia o institucionalización?

ABSTRACT: Following on Paul de Man's "The Resistance to Theory", the article analyzes the constant processes of resistance and institutionalization of literary theory in the university. Resisting positions from both ends of the literary studies scale are explored. It is exposed that more than a resistance to theory, the so-called humanist (read anti-theory) studies are against the explicit radical recognition of their theoretical positions. On the other hand, radical theoreticians are seen to effect resistance movements in an effort to resituate theory along more socially-engaged lines of discussion.
